JOHNNY BUENO COLOR STUDIO

Born from 10 years of building up a loyal local following and a drive to offer a fresh approach, the Johnny Bueno Color Studio has landed. Perched high above the bustling crowds of Union Square, and light years from the crowded and noisy local “hair mills” that churn out carbon-copy clients, meat-grinder style, the Johnny Bueno mantra is “the space is yours,” and it literally is. With just two seats, the salon offers the best in privacy and customizable comfort. As Johnny himself puts it, “You pick the music and we do the rest.” Bueno is the color guru (natch), while the salon’s stylist Robert Gufler handles cuts and styling. The Anthony Laurino-designed nook boasts sweeping Bay views along with a 19-foot succulent garden to ensure each visit is a relaxing break from life’s hectic pace. Product junkies will be happy to note that the salon has partnered with, and will be launching new products by Kevin.Murphy. Not just content to keep the people of San Francisco looking good, Johnny Bueno is also committed to doing good. “[Johnny Bueno is] dedicated to working with local charities and nonprofits like Joy Bianchis’ Helper’s. This year we will be hosting events with Joy at the Couture House to meet her goal for fundraising.” Pretty is as pretty does.

PENDLETON X PROPERTY OF

Collaborations usually result in unique, unparalleled creations with the final product housing the DNA of both parent companies. Pendleton X Property Of, Pendleton’s most recent venture into the world of collabs, is testament to this. The 140-year-old American company teamed up with Property Of, a collection of men’s satchels and accessories founded in 2006, to fashion Pendleton X Property Of — a line of men’s messenger bags featuring Pendleton wool and subtle leather detailing. This collaboration is distinctive because of the inherent differences of the two companies: Pendleton, which has been around forever, creates woolen products reminiscent of those of a rugged mountaineer, while Property Of, a newer brand, delivers a multitude of stylish man bags perfect for the city streets. Pendleton X Property Of provides a carryall for the city slicker or the college dude who’s tired of plain black leather. The guy bags that retail at $250 and come in five tartan and gingham variations, are available at Bloomingdales or can be purchased online at Shop.acontinuouslean.com.
